What is Makikomi Binding?

Makikomi binding is a type of Japanese bookbinding that is characterized by its rolled covers and exposed spine. The covers of a Makikomi book are made from a single sheet of paper that is folded around the book block and then glued or sewn in place. The spine of the book is left exposed, and it is often decorated with a piece of cloth or paper.

Makikomi binding is a relatively simple technique, but it can be used to create books that are both beautiful and durable. Makikomi books are often used for books that are meant to be read and enjoyed for generations, and they are a popular choice for books on traditional Japanese subjects such as calligraphy, painting, and poetry.

The Materials You Need for Makikomi Binding

* A single sheet of paper for the covers * A book block * Glue or thread * A piece of cloth or paper for the spine decoration (optional)

Step-by-Step Instructions for Makikomi Binding

1. Fold the paper for the covers around the book block. 2. Glue or sew the covers in place. 3. Decorate the spine of the book with a piece of cloth or paper (optional).

Tips for Makikomi Binding

* Use a strong paper for the covers. This will help to ensure that your book is durable. * Be careful when gluing or sewing the covers. If you apply too much pressure, you could damage the book. * If you are using a piece of cloth or paper to decorate the spine, make sure that it is securely attached.

Variations on Makikomi Binding

There are many different variations on Makikomi binding. Some popular variations include:

- Chitsu Makikomi: This variation of Makikomi binding uses a single sheet of paper for both the covers and the spine.
- Awase Makikomi: This variation of Makikomi binding uses two sheets of paper for the covers, with the spine being exposed.
- Shikishi Makikomi: This variation of Makikomi binding uses a sheet of shikishi paper for the covers. Shikishi paper is a type of Japanese paper that is known for its strength and durability.
